> From the National Era. Love at the Grave. BY MISS PHŒBE CAREY.

Postage must be paid.

Remembrancer of nature's prime, And herald of her fading near, The last month of the summer time Of leaves and flowers is with us here. More eloquent than lip can preach, To every heart that hopes and fears,

What solemn lesson does it teach,

Of the quick passage of our years. To me it brings sad thoughts of one, Who in the summer's fading bloom, Bright from the arms of love went down To the dim silence of the tomb.

How often since has spring's soft shower Revived the life in nature's breast, And the sweet berb and tender flower Have been renewed above her rest ! How many summer times have told

To mortal hearts their rapid flight,

Since first this heap of yellow mould Shut out her beauty from my sight! Since first, to love's sweet promise true, My feet beside her pillow trod, Till year by year the pathway grew Deeper and deeper in the sod ! Now these neglected roses tell Of no kind hand to tend them, nigh, Oh, God! I have not kept so well My faith as in the years gone by !

But here to-day my step returns, And kneeling where these willows wave, As the soft flame of sunrise burns Down through the dim leaves to thy grave I cry, forgive, that I should prove

Forgetful of thy memory ; Forgive me, that a living love Once came between my soul and thee! For the weak heart that vainly yearned For human love its life to cheer, Baffled and bleeding, has returned

To sufle down its crying here. For, steadfast still, thy faith to me Was one which earth could not estrange; And, lost one, where the angels be, I know affection may not change !

Advice to Wives.

Mount Healthy, Ohio.

Love is fickle; sages say Beauty cannot hold him ; Love will steal himself away, Maidens, if you scold him. Love, he will not live with strife, Even turns from beauty, If the lady plagues his life With her household duty. You can have him in your power, Ludies, if you try it; Use him as you won him first, Love, he can't deny it. Do not fret, and scold, and pout, Aggravating trouble;
